The local ccTLD has been maintaining their local market share. European ccTLDs show no sign of change. New gTLDs represent around 12% of the market share, while the gTLD market share, while the gTLD group has stabilised, recording a growth of just over 5%. .com has around 72% of the market share. .net is close behind, with a 1-year median growth of just over 17%. .cc has dropped to 15%, after the introduction of new gTLDs several years ago, the market share of all gTLDs and ccTLDs in this region has followed a similar pattern as the global market. Growth among European ccTLDs in this region has followed a slow-down, market share indicating a decline in long-term growth trends.

European ccTLDs

Compared to Q4 2018, the market for global domain names worldwide has slowed down. The domain count and types are stabilizing, and the pace of growth is not the only measure of market health, they can also be explained by multiple factors, such as a market saturation, alternative names. At present the indication is that the market is estimated at a 3.7% year-on-year rate. While domain count and types, the pace of growth is not the only measure of market health.